NCSE's next webinar for activists [3]

NCSE is pleased to announce the next of a new series [4] of on-line workshops aimed at broadening and deepening the networks that make our work possible. The next workshop focuses on involving students, who have a direct stake in the integrity of science education, in science education advocacy.

Featured speakers are Dan Pemberton, the California/Nevada Regional Organizer for the Secular Student Alliance, a national organization which supports groups of secular students on college and high school campuses; and Jenny Marienau, U.S. Field Manager for 350.org, who coordinates climate activists on campuses across the country. The panel will be moderated by NCSE's Josh Rosenau.

The workshop begins at 11:00 a.m. Pacific time/2:00 p.m. Eastern time) on June 30, 2014, and spaces are still available, so register now [5]! (The session will be recorded, so don't worry if you're unable to register or participate.) Recording of the previous webinars in the series are now available [4] on-line, along with the slides used in the presentations.
