Francis Collins Nomination: Expert Sources

With the recent nomination of Francis Collins to head the NIH, there's been a lot of talk about the potential conflict between the man's religious views and his work as a scientist...and his potential impact (positive or negative) on the NIH.

Need a clear-eyed take on the issues? The NCSE has two experts you can turn to: Josh Rosenau, biologist and NCSE project director, and theologian Peter Hess, the NCSE's Director, Religious Community Outreach and the author of Catholicism and Science. Both can clearly delineate the issues for your readers.

Some other useful resources:

* Peter's recent OpEd [4] in the Washington Post on religion vs. science.

* Recent video interviews with our Executive Director, Dr. Eugenie Scott, just posted on our YouTube channel:

The National Center for Science Education (NCSE) is a not-for-profit, membership organization that defends and promotes the teaching of evolution in the public schools. The NCSE provides information and resources to schools, parents, and concerned citizens working to keep evolution in public school science education. We educate the press and public about the scientific, educational, and legal aspects of the creation and evolution controversy, and supply needed information and advice to defend good science education at local, state, and national levels. Our 4000 members are scientists, teachers, clergy, and citizens with diverse religious affiliations.
